

Artistic Genealogy Of Kreisler Goes Back To Corelli

The general public is always interested in the genealogy of great men, particularly when this genealogy pertains to the peculiar abilities of the individual, inherited or natural, in his chosen life work or profession.

The artistic genealogy of Fritz Kreisler, world's greatest violinist, who appears here Jan. 6, is of more than ordinary interest. It reaches back to Corelli, the founder of the greatest school of violinists the world has ever known. While Kreisler at one time did some work under the famous Maestri, in the Conservatoire of Paris, his principal teacher and the man to whom he owes the most, was Josef Helmesberger, of Vienna.

Helmesberger was a pupil of his father, who in his turn was a pupil of the famous Boehm, the teacher of Reményi, Gruen, Ernst and Joachim. Boehm was a pupil of Rodé, who was a pupil of Viotti, a pupil of Pugnani, a pupil of Corelli. Corelli was born in 1653, Kreisler in 1875, over 200 years later.

Perhaps it is owing to his very distinguished artistic descent that Kreisler has always been so fond of the old Italian masters. To him their memory owes much for he has resurrected a quantity of their music which has long been forgotten, buried in the dust of old European libraries. Nor has Kreisler limited himself to the old violin music. He has taken many piano pieces, many forgotten songs and arias, and arranged them for his instrument. As a result of his research the literature of his violin has been nearly doubled in the last few years, and all violinists are following in his footsteps, and playing this delightful incomparable music.

Tickets for the concert are on sale at Reinhardt's Music Shop, Peabody Hotel building.
